SYNOPSIS

SHORT SYNOPSIS

Empty spaces, rescue efforts, explanatory models, learning processes – and above all, people working tirelessly to ensure the provision of basic services for all. In the spring of 2020, a global pandemic hit humanity with unprecedented force, challenging all of its supposed securities and seemingly perfect routines. Set against the backdrop of the city of Vienna with its roughly two million inhabitants, THE STANDSTILL documents the Covid-19 crisis over a period of two years.

LONG SYNOPSIS

In March 2020, following the outbreak of the Covid-19 pandemic, 130 countries introduced major restrictions on social contact and movement. The crisis also hit Austria and its capital of Vienna, which is home to around two million people. Over the course of two years and three major lockdowns, public life in the city was repeatedly brought to a halt for months at a time: borders and businesses were closed, open spaces became prohibited areas, and many struggled with being confined to their own four walls. Initially, the citizens of Vienna shouldered the responsibility stoically, keen to do their part for the common goal of containing the further spread of the virus, protecting the elderly and the vulnerable, and helping prevent the healthcare system from reaching breaking point.

It is in this historic era that THE STANDSTILL takes place. Starting in the very early days of the pandemic, when film crews were only allowed to shoot in public spaces under the highest safety standards, Nikolaus Geyrhalter set out to capture “film documentation of a time when filmmaking was not actually possible” (Stefan Grissemann): snapshots and sequences of deserted locations and interviews with people for whom the term “state of emergency” had suddenly become a concrete reality.

Airport staff unload box after box of personal protective equipment from former passenger planes, now lined up at Vienna Airport waiting in vain for the return of their usual cargo; a priest holds his Easter Sunday service in front of an empty church, live-streaming his sermon to the congregation via a tablet; Vienna citizens pull up at a drive-through test centre and are swabbed for Covid-19 through their car windows; deserted shopping centres, large and small shops, stand like empty relics of an affluent society that has suddenly been erased.

Nikolaus Geyrhalter says of his work on THE STANDSTILL: “In many interviews, people spoke to us of their hopes for long-term positive change to our society, of their desire for more closeness, cohesion and solidarity. Certain aspects of the crisis were often seen in a very positive light. But what will remain of the plane-free blue skies and car-free streets, of the sudden lack of stress and the extra time spent with family? What do we want to go back to? And what do we wish to change going forward?”

NOTES BY CLAUS PHILIPP

In previously overcrowded spaces, suddenly barely anything moved; where once the haste of daily life made time pass by in a flash, suddenly everything seemed to slow down.

Throughout the Covid-19 pandemic and the associated lockdowns, one – or at least I – was frequently reminded of the depopulated spaces of Nikolaus Geyrhalter's film HOMO SAPIENS. Somewhere in the back of my mind resonated passages from interviews in Geyrhalter's OVER THE YEARS: tales of exhaustion and stagnation following the constant, relentless restriction of human living conditions and experiences.

Naturally, the mass media saw and presented a different picture of the situation in and around the societal lockdowns: they told the story of the pandemic in the form of a disaster serial with new episodes every day, each attempting to outdo the last in tension and excitement. Or as a triumph of statistics, where the most diverse efforts from politicians and civil society had barely any influence on the phases of steadily rising victim numbers.

In this respect, it can only be a good thing that Nikolaus Geyrhalter reacted so quickly to the crisis and set out to document the period with his appropriately small team. The images and sounds that he collected constitute an important and weighty contribution to an archive of increasingly accelerated times. THE STANDSTILL that the title of his film claims or at least proposes, despite being set in what is actually a very eventful public space, is a culmination of modern society's perpetual state of war proclaimed by French cultural theorist Paul Virilio: it is the "raging standstill" of a society that controls time and space with its advanced technology, but in doing so is ultimately orchestrating its own obliteration. Sometimes this same society attempts something akin to salvation, through which it gains – as THE STANDSTILL demonstrates – its own, very personal experiences. I believe it is a worthwhile endeavour to consider and research where one can find such experiences and which new connections this creates, "in danger and deep distress..."
